Dear graduates and friends:

I offer my sincere gratitude to all of you who made a contribution to Temple Law School in the past fiscal year. Support from our graduates and friends makes a crucial difference in our ability to offer an outstanding legal education to our students and to bring national attention to the quality and uniqueness of our curriculum and programs.

The cover of this issue gives you a sense of the enthusiasm of our Class of 2011 as they are sworn in as members of the bar in Pennsylvania. Not pictured are members of the class recently admitted to bar associations across the country. This graduating class entered the most challenging job market in recent history, and they have done so with talent and ingenuity. We applaud their desire to make a difference in the practice of law and to use their Temple education to initiate change.

By way of news at the Law School, the Temple Board of Trustees recently approved a new Certificate in Trial Advocacy for our JD students in addition to our current Certificate in Business Law. We are also launching a new dual degree program this year in conjunction with the College of Health Professions and Social Work, the JD/MPH, which was initiated by Professor Scott Burris who leads our Center for Public Health Law Research.

Professor Nancy Knauer and the students on our Political and Civil Rights Law Journal held a ground-breaking symposium in October on “Aging in the United States: The Next Civil Rights Movement.” As you will read elsewhere in this issue, the response to this program was impressive, and featured attendance by major policy makers. The journal will publish the papers presented in the Spring 2012 issue, and I guarantee that it will be a great read.

Our entering students were the beneficiaries of a faculty initiative entitled “Introduction to Transactional Skills.” The program was offered as five intensive sessions over ten days and was highly experiential, with students interviewing clients, negotiating with one another and drafting contracts. They represented either a chef or an entrepreneur in creating a new restaurant, and were aided by one of our own, alumna Sophia Lee from the Class of 2000, who owns and operates a Philadelphia restaurant.

Finally, our faculty has garnered several impressive awards so far this year: Professor David Kairys was honored by the National Lawyers Guild for his work in civil rights, and Professor James Shellenberger was honored by Temple University with the Faculty Service Award for his work in helping law students achieve.

Best wishes for the New Year, and thank you for your support of Temple Law School.

Sincerely,

JoAnne A. Epps, Dean
NoVember 2011 Two Temple Law professors, David Hoffman and Duncan Hollis, have been elected to membership in the American Law Institute (ALI), a prestigious group that limits its membership to 4,000. Founded in 1923 in Philadelphia (where it remains based today), the Institute’s stated mission is “to promote the clarification and simplification of the law and its better adaptation to social needs, to secure the better administration of justice, and to encourage and carry on scholarly and scientific legal work.”

Today, ALI is considered the leading independent organization in the United States producing scholarly work to clarify, modernize, and otherwise improve the law. Comprised of lawyers, judges, and law professors, the Institute drafts and publishes Restatements of the Law, model statutes, and principles of law that are enormously influential in the courts and legislatures, as well as in legal scholarship and education.

The two professors—both of whom joined the Temple Law faculty in 2004—bring divergent areas of expertise to the ALI. Hoffman specializes in behavioral law and economics, empirical legal studies, and private dispute resolution, with a particular doctrinal focus on the law of fraud, contracts and corporations. He writes for the popular legal blog, Concurring Opinions, and is a member of the Cultural Cognition Project at Yale Law School. With other investigators at the Cultural Cognition project, Hoffman recently co-authored a paper on how the perceived benefits and risks of political demonstrations are contingent on our values. Another recent project examined how individuals’ values influence their perceptions of fact in civil rights cases.

Hollis, a scholar of international law and the Law School’s Associate Dean for Academic Affairs, focuses on treaties as instruments of international and national commitment, examining how they operate as ‘law’ from international, comparative and constitutional perspectives. His recent work has focused on how U.S. constitutional constraints apply to new models of international cooperation, including U.S. political commitments and U.S. State agreements with foreign powers. Hollis is the editor of the forthcoming Oxford Guide to Treaties and has done path-breaking work on whether and how international law norms apply to government activities in cyberspace. He is a regular contributor to the law blog, Opinio Juris.

As members of the ALI, Hoffman and Hollis will have the opportunity to work with other eminent lawyers, judges, and academics to influence the development of emerging issues in the law in both the domestic and foreign affairs arenas.

Other Temple Law faculty who have been inducted into the ALI include Professors Alice G. Abreu, Anthony J. Bocchino, Jeffrey Dunoff, JoAnne A. Epps, Michael E. Libonati, Eleanor W. Myers, Rafael A. Porrata-Doria Jr., David A. Sonenshein, James A. Strazzella, and William J. Woodward.
The annual meeting of the ABA’s section of litigation convened this year in Philadelphia, bringing top litigators from across the country. One high profile attendee was former U.S. Attorney General Michael Mukasey, who was interviewed by Dean JoAnne A. Epps before a conference audience that included leaders of the ABA, Temple law faculty, and students.

Mukasey was Attorney General under President George W. Bush from 2007 to 2009. He was named to that position following the resignation of Alberto Gonzales. Mukasey began his judicial career when President Reagan named him to sit on the U.S. District Court of the Southern District of New York in 1987. He is now a partner at the New York City firm of Patterson Belknap Webb & Tyler, where he practiced prior to serving on the bench.

OCTOBER 12, 2011 When the National Lawyers Guild chose Philadelphia as the site of its annual convention, organizers say there was immediate consensus on the recipients of the 2011 Law for the People award: David Kairys and David Rudovsky. Since 1971, the firm founded by Temple Law Professor David Kairys and fellow civil rights attorney David Rudovsky (now Kairys, Rudovsky, Epstein, Messing, and Feinberg) has embodied the mission of the National Lawyers Guild.

As a full-time civil rights lawyer from 1968 to 1990, Kairys won the leading race discrimination case against the FBI, won challenges to unrepresentative juries around the country, stopped police sweeps of minority neighborhoods in Philadelphia, and represented Dr. Benjamin Spock in a free speech case before the U.S. Supreme Court. After joining the Temple Law faculty in 1990, Kairys remained engaged in pioneering litigation. In 1996, he conceived the city lawsuits against handgun manufacturers, and his public-nuisance theory has become the major basis for a range of challenges to corporate practices that endanger public health or safety.

Kairys has been a productive and widely known scholar. He edited and co-wrote the classic progressive critique of law, The Politics of Law (1982, 1990, 1998); wrote With Liberty and Justice for Some in 1993; and in 2008, he published Philadelphia Freedom: Memoir of a Civil Rights Lawyer, on the cover of which Cornel West calls him “one of the grand long-distance runners in the struggle for justice in America.” He has also written over 35 articles and book chapters and over 50 commentaries or op-eds.

Kairys has a long-standing commitment to the National Lawyers Guild (NLG), a group founded in 1937 as a way of protesting the racist and exclusionary practices of the American Bar Association. Today, 120 NGL chapters are comprised of lawyers, legal workers and law students dedicated to endeavors including reducing police abuse, defending war resisters, providing pro bono counsel to refugees and upholding First Amendment rights of protesting activists.

Kairys’ work with the NLG began when he was president of the student chapter at Columbia Law School in 1966. “When I was coming to law school, the guild was, and still is, a network and a community of like-minded legal workers of all types,” Kairys says. “The guild today gives you a chance to link to history and is very active on the key issues of our time.”
Great Teacher Receives University-Wide Praise

Professor Shellenberger honored for ‘Outstanding Faculty Service.’

October 2011  Law students have known for a long time that Professor James Shellenberger had a special gift for teaching. They selected him not once, but four times, to receive the George P. Williams Memorial Award for Outstanding Professor of the Year, given at commencement each year by the graduating class. In 1996, Temple echoed the students’ endorsement with a University-wide honor for excellence in the classroom, the Lindback Award. Today, Shellenberger is the James E. Beasley Professor of Law, an endowed chair he has held since 2007.

On October 26, Shellenberger was singled out once again, this time for the Outstanding Faculty Service Award. The award was presented by the University Office of the Provost and Faculty Senate Steering Committee to one faculty member in each of the University’s 17 schools and colleges. Nominated by his Law School colleagues, Shellenberger was celebrated for his dedication to students for more than thirty years and his ongoing commitment to serving the school in a variety of ways.

With a deep knowledge of the law school and its students, Shellenberger has been well-positioned to develop curriculum and serve in administrative positions. In addition to his popular classes in criminal law and procedure, he is credited as the architect of the Academic Core Enrichment program, through which he helps to ensure that every one of our students reaches his or her full potential. Over the years he has assumed many roles at the Law School, including Dean of Students, Director of the Legal Writing Program, and Director of the Summer Program in Rome.

Nancy Knauer Convenes Elder Law Symposium

National experts—including MacArthur ‘Genius’—address more than 150 attendees.

October 22, 2011  A fall symposium focusing on the civil rights of the exploding elder population in the United States brought more than 20 leading scholars and elder advocates to address an enthusiastic and high-powered gathering at Temple Law School. The 150 attendees from across the country and across disciplines included members of federal, state and local government, scholars, practitioners, and advocates.

Presiding over this event was conference organizer Nancy J. Knauer, I. Herman Stern Professor of Law. In a country where the number of individuals aged 85 and older will nearly triple in the next thirty years, Knauer invited experts to explore public policy issues regarding health care, guardianships, caregiving, institutionalized elders, and the special needs of minority seniors. Among the nationally known scholars and advocates who responded to Knauer’s invitation to address the symposium was DC attorney Marie-Therese Connolly, who had learned only weeks earlier that she had won a MacArthur Foundation “Genius” Award for her pioneering work. Connolly is the founder and director of the Appleseed Life Long Justice Initiative and the original architect of the Elder Justice Act, the only federal law to comprehensively address elder abuse, neglect and exploitation. Another high profile presenter was Elizabeth Loewy, the attorney in charge of the Elder Abuse Unit in the New York County District Attorney’s Office, and co-counsel in the prosecution of the son of Brooke Astor, a well-known New York City philanthropist. The event’s keynote speaker was Syracuse Law Professor Nina Kohn, who chairs the ABA’s Elder Rights Committee.

GIVING TO LAW SCHOOL IS A ‘WIN-WIN’, SAYS JACK WARNER ’60

“Temple Law School gave me the opportunity to participate in building a successful legal organization. I’m grateful to Temple for the preparation necessary to succeed in my career. Now I have a chance to give back and get great benefits at the same time. It’s a win-win.”

— John R. Warner ’60

Shortly after graduating Temple Law School in January 1960, John R. (Jack) Warner joined the firm of Davis, Marshall & Crumlish. Two years later, Jack joined Frank Marshall in a relationship that became a new partnership dedicated to defense litigation. Now approaching its 50th anniversary, Marshall, Dennehey, Warner, Coleman and Goggin has grown to more than 400 lawyers with 19 offices in six states. Many of the firm’s attorneys are Temple Law alumni.

Jack and Sue Warner set up their first Temple charitable gift annuity (CGA) with appreciated stock in 2006. The CGA worked out so well that they funded a second, and a third. Now they are up to four Temple CGAs—and still counting.

Jack likes the tax advantages of CGAs and the ability to diversify long-term appreciated stock into a steady stream of tax-advantaged income. Jack and Sue have directed the “Temple part” of their gift annuities to scholarships for law students.

To learn more about the advantages of charitable gift annuities at Temple Law School, please call Janine Ehsani in the Law Legacy Office at 215.204.4754, or contact lawlegacy@temple.edu.

16 • TEMPLE ESQ. NOVEMBER 2011
RIGHTS OF INDIGENOUS PEOPLES TOPIC OF DEAN’S INVITATIONAL LECTURE

Advocate and litigator Robert Coulter speaks at law school.

Coulter is the founder and executive director of the Indian Law Resource Center, as well as a Potawatomi Indian and a Justice of the Supreme Court of the Citizen Potawatomi Nation. For 25 years, he has been a leading advocate for the recently adopted U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. In his presentation at Temple, Coulter spoke in depth about U.S. law as it applies to Indians, including, for example, a line of cases that hold that explicit discrimination against Indians is a “non-suspect classification,” unlike other racial or ancestral classifications.
JUSTIN INGERMAN SCHOLARSHIP ESTABLISHED

Student awarded scholarship in honor of the son of Brad and Laurie '82 Ingerman.

Albert Moran '14 is the first recipient of the newly established Justin Ingerman Scholarship. The scholarship provides crucial support which he will be eligible to renew for all three years of law school. Moran, a 2009 graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, taught math at a charter school in Philadelphia as part of “Teach for America” before coming to Temple Law. The scholarship that will do so much to lessen Moran’s financial burden, and the burden of future recipients, was established through the generosity of the proud parents and sister of another law student, Justin Michael Ingerman.

Sadly, Justin Michael Ingerman died in 2009, just two months short of his twenty-fourth birthday. At the time of his death, Justin was living in Brooklyn, NY attending his second semester at Brooklyn Law School. Wanting to establish something permanent in Justin’s memory that would embody his generous spirit, his parents and sister, Danielle, established the Justin Ingerman Foundation, providing the funding for the Ingerman Scholarships.

Justin’s mother describes him as “curious and inquisitive; he loved discussions and debate centering on anything from sports to politics to history.” He grew up in Bryn Mawr, PA, attending The Haverford School and University of Pennsylvania, where he majored in urban studies. Before entering law school, he worked at The Ingerman Group, a company started by his father Brad, a non-practicing attorney. Justin hoped to eventually be able to fill his father’s shoes at that company, which focuses on the development, management and construction of affordable housing.

“Simply put, Justin loved life,” says Laurie Ingerman ’82. “This scholarship is a concrete way to continue the promise that he embodied throughout his life, and to help support other law students as we know he would have wanted us to.”

The Justin Ingerman Scholarship will stand as a lasting legacy, providing one year tuition support for a Temple Law student, renewable for two more years for students in good academic standing. Ingerman Scholars will be expected to participate in at least one significant public service project each year, and will have the opportunity to meet with the Ingerman family, whose generosity made this scholarship possible.

Anthony W. Clark ’79 is an avid Temple booster, an enthusiastic sports fan and a devoted father. His family combined these three passions when they chose Lincoln Financial Field, home field for the Temple Owls’ football team, as the location for a check presentation to the law school. The $60,000 donation was made to the law school by the Clark family in honor of Anthony’s 60th birthday.

The donation will go to support law students with financial needs. Clark himself received financial support to attend law school after being accepted through the Law School’s discretionary admissions process—the Sp.A.C.E. program—partly because of his public interest work as a welfare rights advocate for the national service program VISTA. Today, he stays connected to the law school as a member of its Board of Visitors, a group of alumni that serve in an advisory capacity to the dean and the administration.

Clark is a partner in the Wilmington, DE office of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, where he heads the corporate restructuring and bankruptcy litigation department. He joined the firm almost thirty years ago and became a partner in 1988. He has represented clients in industries ranging from telecommunications to manufacturing to pharmaceuticals to entertainment. Recently, he represented the National Hockey League in the case that kept the Phoenix Coyotes in Arizona.

SERVICE EVENT CONTINUES TO GROW

OCTOBER 14, 2011 “Serving Neighbors, Connecting Communities” is a day of community service instituted in 2009 to provide a chance for students to learn about and contribute to the community in which many will serve as practitioners. About 65 volunteers contributed to the third annual day of service in the neighborhood east of Temple’s campus. The event partnered law school volunteers—students, faculty and staff—with Kensington South Neighborhood Advisory Council to tend trees, pick up trash, distribute newsletters, and complete a Mural Arts project by painting a fence surrounding a mural.

1980s

In September, Texas Governor Rick Perry appointed ANNA MARIA FARIAS ’80 to a newly created position on the OneStar Foundation, which furthers volunteerism and community service in Texas. Farias is an attorney and consultant in private practice and a former director of the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives.

DENNIS J. VALENZA ’81 has become of counsel at Rawle & Henderson’s Philadelphia office, where he will practice in the area of environmental tort litigation. Valenza was previously at Morgan, Lewis & Bockius in Philadelphia.

JAMES KOZUCH ’85, a senior partner at Caesar, Rivise, Bernstein, Cohen and Pokotilow, presented “Intellectual Property Basics: Protection of Competitive Assets” at a program hosted by the Entrepreneurial Studies Group at Muhlenberg College in November.

ROSEANN B. TERMINI ’85 recently spoke on “Food Safety Modernization Act Legal Issues” at St. Joseph’s University. Termini is the author of Life Sciences Law: Federal Regulation of Drugs, Biologics, Medical Devices, Foods and Dietary Supplements.

In November, Texas Governor Rick Perry appointed ALAN J. MITTELMAN ’86 has been elected president of the Philadelphia Estate Planning Council, the largest such council in the United States. He was also recently elected as a Fellow of the American College of Trust and Estate Council.

MARCI SCHMERLER ’86 has joined Carlton Fields’ Atlanta office in its real estate and finance practice. She was previously with Thompson Hine, where she was a partner and head of the firm’s real estate and finance practice.

The chief executive officer and founder of Wescott Financial Advisory Group, GRANT RAWDIN ’87, has been elected chair of the Urban Affairs Coalition’s board of directors. The coalition of 75 partner organizations in the Philadelphia region works to “strengthen nonprofit organizations through fiscal sponsorship, capacity building, and program evaluation; improve life chances for youth and young adults; and provide economic opportunity to low-income households, working families, and disadvantaged businesses.”

STEVEN H. LUPIN ’73, managing partner of the Lansdale, PA firm of Hamburg, Rubin, Mullin, Maxwell & Lupin, has been selected as a fellow of the Litigation Counsel of America. Lupin is the immediate past president of the Montgomery Bar Association.

GLENN A. YEAGER ’76, of counsel for Stevens & Lee, presented at the Mortgage Bankers Association Quality Assurance and Residential Underwriting Conference in September, updating attendees on regulations including the SAFE Act, Nationwide Mortgage Reform and unfair, deceptive and abusive practices. Yeager concentrates his practice in the financial services sector. Prior to joining Stevens & Lee, he was senior counsel and regulatory compliance manager for Meridian Bancorp.

NICOLAS L. CHIARKAS ’78 retired last year after 22 years as a Wisconsin State Public Defender. The former New York City police officer was the longest tenured Chief State Public Defender in the nation.

JOSEPH D. MANCANO ’79, a partner of Pietragallo Gordon Alfano Bosick and Raspani, presented “Understanding Bank Agreements” at the 2011 University of North Carolina Treasury Management Program on the latest advances and trends in treasury and cash management.

ABA PRO PUBLICO AWARD GOES TO TEMPLE ALUM

AUGUST 2011 The ABA presented a 2011 Pro Publico Award to Temple Law alumna ELENA PARK ’98, the Canadian born daughter of Korean immigrants. Park was cited by the American Bar Association at their annual meeting in Toronto for her “extraordinary dedication in providing 200 hours a year of free representation to needy immigrants.” She was also inducted into the Temple University Gallery of Success.

Park attended University of Toronto before entering Temple Law, and eventually becoming a U.S. citizen. In 1999, Park joined Cozen O’Connor where she founded the firm’s immigration practice. She was a member of the team that challenged the constitutionality of the 2006 Hazleton ordinance that forbade hiring or renting to illegal immigrants.

Park also worked with a colleague on the case of Zhen Xing Jiang, an illegal immigrant from China who miscarried twins after being deported by federal agents in Philadelphia. That case sparked local protests and headlines as far away as Beijing. A court eventually granted Jiang permanent residency.
DANIELS IN 2002 AT THE UNVEILING OF THE PLAQUE THAT BEARS HIS NAME IN BARRACK HALL.

DANIELS '62
OCTOBER 3, 2011
Robert C. Daniels '62, a former Superior Court judge and chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association, died at the age of 73 from head injuries suffered in a fall. Judge Daniels, a lawyer with more than 40 years experience in civil trial and appellate litigation, was appointed by Governor Edward Rendell in 2007 to serve an unexpired term on the Pennsylvania Superior Court. Since leaving the court in 2008, he had been with the firm of Elliot Greenleaf in Philadelphia. Judge Daniels was also president of the Philadelphia Trial Lawyers Association from 1976 to 1977.

After graduating first in his class at Temple University School of Law in 1962, he worked as a law clerk for federal judges and then as an associate in law practices in Philadelphia. In the late 1970s, he established the firm of Daniels, Saltz, Mongeluzzi & Barrett. He was with Sprague & Sprague when he was appointed to the Superior Court. Judge Daniels served on the Law School Board of Visitors, was a charter member of the Centennial Society and a major donor to the Centennial Campaign. In 2009, he joined a group visiting Temple programs in China and Japan.

KEARNEY ROWLEY '80
OCTOBER 17, 2011
Maureen Kearney Rowley '80, Chief Federal Defender for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, died at the age of 57 from breast cancer.

Rowley embraced public interest work soon after her graduation from the Law School in 1980, when she became the sole staff and trial attorney for Women Against Abuse. In 1981, she became an assistant defender with the Defender Association of Philadelphia.

In 1983, she became a staff attorney in the Federal Court Division and became the first female head of any of the federal Eastern District courthouse agencies when she became Chief Federal Defender in 1989. One of her most significant achievements in that position was the creation in 1996 of a capital habeas unit, which advocates for review of death penalty cases.

Rowley always maintained close ties to Temple Law and was an adjunct law professor in the trial advocacy course. In 2005, the Law School recognized her professional accomplishments in the public interest, awarding her a Barrack '68 Alumni Achievement Award at the Alumni Association’s 90th anniversary celebration.

Maureen Rowley’s family has asked that gifts be made in her memory to Temple University Beasley School of Law.

1990s

IVAN DEVOREN '90 has joined the Houston-based energy law firm, Burleson LLP, as a partner in its Pittsburgh office.

DANIEL JECK '92, a partner at Eisenberg, Rothweiler, Winkler, Eisenberg & Jeck, presented a seminar, “New Rules for Screening Potential Cases” in October at the annual Medical Malpractice Seminar offered by the Pennsylvania Association for Justice.

GLENN NEIMAN '92 is a partner at Brilliant & Neiman, a workers’ compensation firm based in Trevose, PA. Neiman’s blog has been selected three times in the last four years by LexisNexis as one of the “Top 25 Blogs” for workers’ compensation and workplace issues.

LARRY REEVES '92 is the new law library director at Vanderbilt University. Reeves has also been on the staffs of New York and Brooklyn Law Schools. Most recently, he was the associate director at George Mason Law School.

In August, Pepper Hamilton announced that RICHARD J. ZACK '95 joined the white-collar defense practice of the firm. Zack is a 12-year veteran of the U.S. Attorney’s Office, where he most recently oversaw the office’s economic crimes unit.

2000s

Obermayer Rebmann Maxwell & Hippel partner MICHAEL E. BERTIN ‘00 lectured at the inaugural meeting of Temple Law’s Family Law Society.

JOSEPH A. MALFITANO ’00 has been named executive vice president of Special Situations of The Hilco Organization. He joined Hilco in 2007 as deputy general counsel after practicing in the bankruptcy and corporate restructuring section at Young Conaway Stargatt & Taylor for more than seven years. Hilco is an international organization “dedicated to asset valuation, monetization, investment and advisory services.”

BRYAN WERLEY ’04 was elected partner at the Chartwell Law Offices. He has an active trial practice in the firm’s civil litigation department.

JENNIFER L. BRASTER ’06 has joined the Las Vegas firm of Pisanelli Bice as an associate. She joins Pisanelli Bice from Lionel Sawyer & Collins, also in Las Vegas, where she worked in the litigation department.

In September, LOUISE MELCHOR ’06 joined Duane Morris as an associate in the trial practice group.

Stradley Ronon litigator EDITH PENN ’06 was inducted into Milton Hershey School’s Spartan Hall of Fame. The Hall of Fame recognizes alumni with a high level of accomplishment.

JOHANN R. CORNIELLE, LL.M. ’07 recently received a license from the Pennsylvania Board of Law Examiners and the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania to be a foreign legal consultant for the Dominican Republic. He is the first Dominican attorney in Pennsylvania to be granted such a license, which will allow him to formally advise and represent U.S. clients in transactions with that country. Cornielle has worked as a foreign associate at Gonzales & Tiagha in Philadelphia since 2009.

Vice President of Philadelphia Health Management Corporation TINE HANSEN TURTON ’07 was awarded the G. Fred DiBona Award for Commitment to Health Access by the St. Catherine Laboure Medical Clinic. Turton is also the chief executive officer of the National Nursing Centers Consortium.

This fall, ELIZABETH YAEGER ’09 joined HIAS Pennsylvania, an immigrant aid organization based in Philadelphia. At HIAS, Yaeger is an attorney and coordinator of the Pennsylvania Asylee Outreach Project, a statewide program funded by the Office of Refugee Resettlement to help asylees achieve self-sufficiency by linking them with needed services and benefits.

Create a Legacy Where Law Meets Life

A Charitable Gift Annuity is a great way to support the school and help yourself or loved ones at the same time.

You will receive:

- Secure, tax-advantaged income for life
- Current income tax deduction
- Lifetime membership in the Law Legacy Society

ALUMNI PARENT ARTHUR GOLD WANTS TO HELP OTHER STUDENTS, AS HIS SON WAS HELPED

“Beasley is such an exciting law school. I enjoy their interesting speakers and being among the students.”

A native of New York, Arthur Gold adopted Philadelphia as his second hometown following a career in retail management. Retirement gives him time to enjoy the city’s museums, concerts, and art classes. An award-winning ceramicist, Arthur also enjoys attending law lectures at Temple.

Arthur, whose son Peter Gold ’79 graduated from Temple Law, established a charitable gift annuity as a way to start the Temple Law scholarship he had already planned to endow through his will. The CGA offers an attractive interest rate, tax-favored income and a tax deduction.

Arthur views the personal financial benefits of a CGA as a bonus. “I’m just happy to help today’s students as my son, Peter, was helped,” he says.

DEFENDER WINS GINSBURG WRITING AWARD

KATRINA YOUNG ’11

For the past nine years, the Philadelphia Bar Association has conducted a writing competition in honor of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Temple has long dominated this competition, which is open to six area law schools. For the fifth year in a row, a Temple Law student has taken first place—an honor which includes a cash award. This year’s winner is recent graduate Katrina Young ’11.

Young entered law school with a firm commitment to public interest law. Outside the classroom, she enjoyed learning the hands-on aspects of the law while interning at the ACLU and Community Legal Services of Philadelphia, as well as participating in the Temple clinical at the Defender Association of Philadelphia and the family law litigation clinical at Temple’s Legal Aid Office.

The Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg Pursuit of Justice Legal Writing Competition is sponsored by the Philadelphia Bar Association, and accepts papers “on any topic relating to rights, privileges and responsibilities under federal law.” Young’s paper, “Reforming Welfare Reform: A Call to Amend the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act in a Way That Recognizes, Respects, and Values All Families While Effectively Alleviating Poverty,” was written under the supervision of Professor Ellie Margolis, and explores how the federal welfare program negatively affects and discriminates against lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender families and individuals.

This fall Young began at the Defender Association of Philadelphia as an Assistant Defender, representing indigent criminal defendants. It is her dream job. “I went to law school to be a public interest lawyer, specifically to work on issues relating to and stemming from inequality within the criminal justice system,” says Young. “So I am absolutely ecstatic to have this opportunity.”
