MESSAGE FROM THE DEANS

Dean Gregory Mandel

Thank you for your interest in the Temple-Tsinghua Master of Laws (LL.M.) program in Beijing, the first accredited foreign law degree program in China. Temple established this program in 1998 as part of the rule-of-law initiatives launched by Presidents Jiang Zemin and Bill Clinton. To date, over 600 students have graduated from this program.

The friendship between Temple and China dates back to 1979, when Temple bestowed an Honorary Doctorate of Laws upon Deng Xiaoping. Temple has built enduring bonds of cooperation with the Chinese government and universities, especially Tsinghua University.

The Temple-Tsinghua LL.M. program is the most renowned cooperative legal education program in China, having been recognized by both the U.S. and Chinese governments.

The U.S. Senate stated that Temple “has succeeded in furthering the goal of promoting collaborative legal exchanges between the United States and China.” Similarly, President Jiang Zemin noted the program’s “lofty mission in educating qualified legal professionals in China.”

Students benefit from systematic study in U.S. law as well as a diverse classroom environment with students from the public and private sectors. Chinese judges, prosecutors, government officials, law professors, and lawyers all come together to discuss fundamental legal concepts in U.S. law. They share their diverse perspectives with each other as well as with American law professors and practicing lawyers.

In addition, the program provides students with the opportunity to exchange views with U.S. judges, including a private meeting with the U.S. Supreme Court during the summer session in Philadelphia. Students also benefit from the program’s broad alumni network in China and around the world.

The unique strengths of the program include the broad-ranging faculty expertise, comprehensive and practice-oriented courses, and extensive resources available at both Tsinghua and Temple. The program’s curriculum offers rich insight into U.S. law, thus allowing students to enhance their reasoning process and develop analytical skills while improving their ability to engage in international legal practice.

We invite you to apply to the program and become a member of the Temple-Tsinghua family.

About the Law Schools

Temple University, founded in 1884, is a comprehensive public university with over 40,000 students based in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Temple law school is nationally ranked for its trial advocacy (#2), international law (#12), and legal research and writing (#15) specialties. With 1,200 students and over 70 full-time faculty members, Temple law school is well regarded in the field of legal education.

Tsinghua University, founded in 1911, is one of China’s most prestigious universities with over 45,000 students based in Beijing, China. Tsinghua law school is nationally recognized for its Anglo-American law, civil law, and criminal specialties. With 1,300 students and over 60 full-time faculty members, Tsinghua law school is considered a top choice for many of China’s law students and future leaders.

Program Overview

The Temple-Tsinghua LLM program equips Chinese legal professionals with the knowledge, reasoning capacity, and technical skills essential to succeed as legal practitioners in a global context. Through 15 months of study, students sharpen their analytical abilities, develop new legal thought processes, and enhance their capacity to communicate about legal concepts.

Classes meet at Tsinghua law school in Beijing, except for a U.S. summer session on Temple’s main campus in Philadelphia. The program begins with a one-month intensive Legal English course that prepares students for their law school coursework. The courses in Beijing focus on principal areas of American law studied by law students in the United States, with course offerings in civil, criminal, and commercial law. During the summer term in Philadelphia, students focus on technical skill, while also visiting various local sites. Graduates of the program receive a Master of Laws (LL.M.) degree from Temple and a Certificate of Completion from Tsinghua. The program is approved by the Ministry of Education of China and accredited by the American Bar Association (ABA).

Courses are taught in English by Temple full- and part-time faculty, Tsinghua faculty, and adjunct professors who are expert practitioners in their fields. The composition of the program faculty will vary from year to year. The Temple Law Alumni Association of China (TLAAC) has over 600 members and holds events each year. TLAAC gives students a strong platform for networking, knowledge sharing, and professional development.

Degree Requirements

The Master of Laws degree is conferred upon students who complete the required credit hours with a grade point average of 2.0 (C) or better and who are recommended for the degree by the faculty. Temple policy requires that students attend at least 80% of their classes, although most professors increase this requirement for individual courses.

Detailed information on the academic program, degree requirements, policies, and codes of conduct are available from the Temple-Tsinghua program office.

Highly-Ranked Programs

Our Students benefit from access to Temple’s world-class faculty as well as support through individualized academic and career advising. In the 2018 U.S. News & World Report Best Graduate Schools rankings, Temple’s trial advocacy retained its #2 rank, international law remained at #12, and legal research and writing was ranked #3.

Curriculum

The program includes basic and elective courses. All students must complete the basic courses as well as the required number of electives. The courses listed are representative of the types of courses that may be offered in any given year.

Each term is eight weeks, with seven weeks of courses and one week of exams. Courses generally meet two full or three partial days during the week. Courses are not offered on weekends.

Students must participate in the intensive Legal English program, but they may request to be exempted if they work in a full-time English-language environment and earn sufficiently high scores on the English assessment exam used for admission purposes.

For students to be better equipped for law practice, practical coursework is included in the curriculum.

We regularly invite guest speakers to address students who are from government, corporate, and legal communities. Previous guest speakers have included counsel from Alston Bird, SAP, Boeing, and the U.S. Department of Justice.

During the Philadelphia summer session, students are given a first-hand view of the U.S. legal system, including interactive visits to the U.S. Supreme Court, federal and state courts, law firms, and prisons.

Select students are given internship opportunities with the Philadelphia offices of Reed Smith, Blank Rome, Alston Bird, Morgan Lewis, Drinker Biddle & Reath, and Hangley Aronchick Segal.
