

J.D. Spring Semester Abroad Program in Japan

For over 26 years, Temple University's international law program in Japan has offered law students a unique opportunity to study in Tokyo for an entire spring semester. The law program in Japan is designed to educate the next generation of lawyers to practice in the global marketplace and to provide aspiring lawyers with the opportunity to become intimately familiar with the international practice of law and legal community. The program also provides participants with an invaluable chance to experience Asia and an opportunity to become distinguished in a competitive legal market.

Highly Rated Law School

Temple is a recognized leader in global legal education. Our law school consistently ranks among the top U.S. law schools in practical areas such as trial advocacy, legal research and writing, and international programs. Notably, Temple's overall ranking is No. 56 and the international programs rank No. 17 among all U.S. law schools.

Accreditation

Temple University School of Law is accredited by the American Bar Association (ABA) and is a member of the American Association of Law Schools (AALS). The semester abroad program in Japan is accredited by the ABA. Temple University Japan is designated as a foreign university under Japanese law.

Student Eligibility

The law program in Japan is open to 2L and 3L students in good academic and disciplinary standing at an ABA-accredited law school. About half of our J.D. students typically come from Temple; the remaining 50% come from other law schools. J.D. students also study with LL.M. and Certificate students coming from Japan and other countries, including China, South Korea, France, Switzerland, Brazil, United States, and Canada among many countries.

Visiting Students

Students from other law schools who expect to apply credits completed in Japan toward their home institution's J.D. degree are urged to confirm in advance that the course work will be accepted by their home institutions. The vast majority of ABA-accredited law schools readily accept Temple credits toward their J.D. degree. If any questions or concerns arise about the transfer of credit, Temple will be happy to discuss them with the student or their law school administration.

The law program in Japan is also open to post-J.D. students pursuing Temple's LL.M. in Transnational Law, which may be completed partially or entirely in Tokyo. Students who participate in the law program in Japan and receive admission to the LL.M. in Transnational Law program prior to graduation may apply a portion of their credit hours of international course work from their Japan studies towards the LL.M. degree. J.D. students who graduate from Temple Law School may apply up to 12 approved credit hours, while J.D. students who graduate from other law schools may apply up to 6 approved credit hours towards the Transnational LL.M. degree.

J.D. students who are interested in extending their study abroad at Temple Law Japan, with an approval from their law schools, may participate in our non-degree, 12-credit certificate program in the fall semester immediately before or the summer semester following the spring semester abroad with us. Temple Law Japan offers two certificate programs: the Certificate in U.S. Law and the Certificate in International Law.

Class Schedule

Courses at our Japan campus are offered mainly once a week on weekdays, 6:45 pm – 9:30 pm. This schedule is to accommodate the majority of our local students who are working professionals, and it also allows J.D. students to intern or work during the daytime. We offer some daytime and Saturday classes as well. For more information: www.tuj.ac.jp/law/jd-abroad

Tuition & Costs

Students are billed for tuition and fees before departing. These costs are paid in dollars to Temple University in Philadelphia. Students paying full-time tuition may take up to 15 credits. Students taking fewer than 10 credits pay on a per-credit basis. Non-credit Japanese language class with cultural activities, which will not appear on the student's transcript, may be taken for an additional $300. A $200 non-refundable seat deposit is required by the October 1 deadline, and will be applied toward tuition. Tuition is not refundable after the first week of classes.

ESTIMATED TOTAL COST $26,895

(includes personal expenses, tuition and program fees, but not the optional Japanese language fee)

Regular Tuition: $12,938

Student Activities Fee: $336

Estimated Budget for Personal Expenses

Expense Category	Budget
Housing & Utilities	$5,455*
Food/Personal Expenses	$5,455
Airfare	$1,400
Books & Supplies	$900
Daily Commuting	$364
Japanese National Health Insurance (mandatory)	$47
Total	$13,621

Optional Japanese language course and cultural activities costs $300

Rate: 110 yen = one U.S. dollar (as of Apr. 2020)

* Based on the cost for four months of an average studio apartment near the University. Students can find more affordable housing – studio apartments, shared housing, and “guest houses” – outside central Tokyo, but daily commuting costs and traveling time will increase.

 While students likely will find a less expensive airfare, we use $1,400 because the average commercial airline ticket costs about that amount.

Please note that the regular tuition and student activities fee for Spring 2021 are subject to change pending final budget approval by Temple University.

Financial needs will vary depending on the student's spending habits. The projected budget above, while not extravagant, is designed to permit students to obtain a financial aid package they might reasonably need while studying in Tokyo. The figure for each category of expense is the most that we estimate students will need to spend on that category.

Financial Aid

Temple Law Students

If you are eligible for financial aid, you may use this aid for the Tokyo Law Program. In applying for aid, use the projected "Financial Aid Program Budget" for the J.D. Semester-Abroad Program, which you can find at http://www.law.temple.edu/study_abroad/japan.

Non-Temple Law Students

If you are a student from a law school other than Temple who is earning credit toward a degree, you can usually apply your federal loans to the program costs through a financial aid consortium agreement. In order to complete your financial aid paperwork on time, submit your application for admission to the program as early as possible in the fall semester. After being admitted to the Program, you should contact your school's Financial Aid Office, and then contact Temple's Financial Aid Office, by phone at (215) 204-8943 or via e-mail at lwfinaid@temple.edu, to facilitate the process.

Cancellations

We may cancel the program in the unlikely event that too few students enroll. We might also cancel or terminate it should a natural disaster occur, or security issues arise. If a student withdraws from the program for any other reason, we will not refund any applicable application fees and the seat deposit. We will refund tuition only if the student withdraws from the program during the first week of classes; otherwise, tuition is nonrefundable.

Housing

Temple University, Japan Campus does not provide student housing for law students. However, the Japan program will provide, during the fall Semester before departing to Japan, information on how to search for housing including a list of English-speaking housing services. In the past, students have found their own housing fairly easily after arriving in Japan (or before arriving) through such housing services. For students who stay in Japan less than one year, a monthly-based furnished apartment or a share house will be the most convenient housing option.

Internships/Part-Time Employment

Upon application to and approval by the Immigration Office here in Tokyo, students may work in Japan on a student visa in a legal or non-legal (English teaching, business, etc.) position. The law program offers an internship program, and J.D. students who wish to obtain a spring internship may apply for paid or unpaid internship positions through the program. We set up interviews with law firms, corporations, and non-profit or non-governmental organizations. In past years, students attending the Japan program obtained some type of internship (either paid or unpaid); however, hiring decisions are fully up to the employers and internships are not guaranteed.

Extracurricular Activities

Spending a full semester abroad gives you time to explore Tokyo and the rest of Japan. In addition to a challenging academic experience, each year students participate in many extracurricular activities. Field trips are an integral part of the Law Program and reinforce the international law experience. In past years, the Law Program planned visits and activities:

- Welcome student and faculty mixer
- Career talks and business seminars/conferences
- Supreme Court of Japan and Tokyo District Court
- Fuchu Prison
- Sumo Wrestling Tournament
- Local neighborhood cherry blossom tour
- End of semester party
